WHO IS SHIVA?

EXCERPT FROM „INDIA AND ITS GODS“

You may have seen that in a few of my videos I raise the question of whether the Hindu deity Shiva is identical to the fallen angel Satan of the Bible. I also address the "Unholy Trinity of Evil": Shiva, Maa (also Durga, Kali or the Cosmic Mother) and Ganesh. Hinduism certainly plays a significant role in the spiritual scene, where the worship and adoration of Hindu deities is not uncommon.

My own master Sant Thakar Singh had repeatedly stated that Shiva in particular is one of the highest representatives of the negative force and complained about its popularity among the Indian population. In contrast, his successor, Sant Baljit Singh, advocates a positive attitude towards the Hindu gods. In the early years of his mastery, he elevated a woman, supposedly an incarnation of the Divine Mother, to a position of mastery superior to his own. However, this relationship eventually broke down.

You can assume that I have good reasons for these posts and would never publish something like this if I wasn't absolutely sure that there was something to it. It is very close to my heart. I want unsuspecting spiritual seekers to be aware of what they are dealing with when they get involved in something related to Hinduism. I hardly think that German housewives chanting a Shiva mantra in a group on a meditation weekend know what they are doing. They may think it's fun or relaxing, but such practices create a connection to powerful forces whose effect can be underestimated. This topic is not an easy one and I don't have the time to delve into it. Nevertheless, I have collected some information that supports my statements and may inspire you to do further research.

If you look at statues or images of the deity Shiva, you will notice that one or more snakes and a trident appear somewhere. In the Bible, the snake stands for Satan, the tempter, and symbolizes a demonic character. It is also associated with sexuality. Everyone knows that snakes are normally perceived as repulsive and dangerous. The trident is also typically Satan's weapon.

Shiva bears the title "The Destroyer", he loves to kill and destroy - to prepare the way for new things or to eliminate negative things, as is emphasized again and again. Satan is also referred to in the Bible as a murderer and destroyer.

Among Satanists, Shiva is worshipped and revered - this is a fact that can be easily verified. It is no secret that Shiva is also considered the "lord of demons and all kinds of evil spirits". For example, you can read on the Facebook page of the famous Shiva worshipper "Sadhguru" that not only gods, but also devilish beings worship and adore Shiva. Founder of the "Horned God Sect" LeRoy explains in a talk on his YouTube channel that Shiva is the greatest of all gods of the left-handed (dark, negative) path.

But what kind of attitude do demons have towards God, the great, kind, loving, powerful God of love, purity, light and compassion, as he is worshipped in Christianity, for example? That's right: they hate him, despise and mock him, they fear and fight him with all means at their disposal. They suffer from his love, they do not want it, they strictly reject it. If they come under its influence, they either go a little crazy or they become temporarily peaceful, friendly, as if changed, but against their will, their nature, their essence and only as long as the divine power is acting on them.

This alone should make it clear that Shiva, to whom hosts of demons happily submit, has nothing to do with the true God, who is our Father, whose Son is Jesus Christ. It looks much more like a completely opposite God. Satan is God's arch-enemy and adversary. So the idea that Satan and Shiva are the same force is quite obvious, logical and plausible.

Shiva is of course also regarded as a god who rules the world, together with his siblings (Brahma, Vishnu) and his mother, also highly revered and worshipped by Satanists and devil worshippers. In the so-called "Shiva Purana", which can be obtained easily and free of charge on the Internet, also in German translation, you can read, for example, that Shiva is described as the Lord of Illusion and his mother as the disseminator of all (the great) illusion (Maya). In Hinduism, Maya is seen as the cause of negative, evil emotions. "Shiva's power of illusion is unfathomable. It deceives the entire universe, living and immovable beings, gods and demons."

Satan, a supreme representative of the Negative Force, is said to rule our world with suffering and deception. In fact, the Negative Force would no longer be able to exercise its dominion over humanity if the truth were visible to all. Thus, according to the Bible, Jesus declared: "The truth will set you free" and "I am the way, the truth and the life." If the God of Christianity is a God of truth, then what is a God of deception and illusion? I would say that it is clearly his adversary and worst enemy. And here we are again with Satan, the "father of lies".

It is interesting to note that in Hinduism there is no such entity as Satan, who appears as God's adversary. Hindus normally regard him as an invention; the epochal war between good and evil, as described in the Abrahamic religions, does not exist. The world is not evil, we are only confronted with the evil within ourselves because we do not control ourselves. This is why it is sometimes claimed that evil ultimately does not exist at all. It is easy to understand that evil does not want to be recognized and has no interest in people following a moral code, a conscience.

The living, loving God wants us to focus on him alone. According to the biblical accounts, the worship of various, different deities or the cult of statues, images etc. is something that God is not happy about. Hindus believe that the gods are aspects of the supreme God and therefore it makes no difference who they worship. This may sound wise and superior, but does it make sense?

I noticed that the deities praise each other in a way that seems completely exaggerated and exaggerated to me. The drama and theatricality of it all seems both amusing and strange to me. It becomes clear that this is what the gods want and enjoy and that it is sometimes necessary to appease them so that they don't go crazy. They are sometimes described as highly sensitive, easily irritable, quick to take offense and extremely violent.

Sexuality in strange forms is also described. In the Harivamsa Purana, for example, there is talk of a sodomy fertility ritual that queens performed with a horse. One story is about how the deity Indra entered the horse during such a ritual in order to have sexual intercourse with the queen. When the king realized this, he became very angry - understandably.

Another story in the Shiva Purana tells how Brahma, excited at the sight of Shiva's wife Sita, an incarnation of the Divine Mother, lost 4 drops of semen. Shiva was furious and wanted to kill Brahma immediately. However, intense praise and appeasement finally appeased him.

Another story explains what Shiva was secretly meditating on: Rama, an incarnation of his brother Vishnu. On the other hand, Rama worships and adores his brother Shiva. Don't you find that a bit strange?

Perhaps also interesting is the story of Sita's rescue from captivity by Ravana, the demon king. Incidentally, Ravana is considered to be Shiva's most ardent devotee and is still worshipped in some places today. Sita later undergoes a fire ritual to prove her loyalty - voluntarily - and passes. Nevertheless, Rama sends her into the wilderness for fear of slander. Alternatively, he could have had himself killed by beheading to escape disgrace. Is this what an adorable being looks like?

What do such characters have to do with the living God of the Abrahamic religions, Abba, the Father? The well-known Hindu names of God Rama, Krishna or Narayana refer to incarnations of Vishnu, not to a higher, superior God. Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva and Durga praise and worship each other as the greatest. They in no way embody the character and qualities of the biblical God YHWH and have absolutely no similarities to Jesus Christ. In the spiritual / esoteric scene, people like to pretend that Christianity and Hinduism are basically the same, and so it is not uncommon for "Jesus Sananda" and "Lord Krishna" to be mentioned in the same breath, for example.

Another interesting point is the belief among Hindus that Shiva and Vishnu are immortal or absolute principles. For example, there is the belief that Shiva is consciousness itself and therefore without beginning or end. In fact, Durga is referred to as the mother of the divine triad. The three gods are in turn regarded as siblings or brothers. They therefore emerged from one mother, the cosmic mother, so their existence also has a beginning and should therefore not last indefinitely. In the case of Brahma, it is clear that he has a limited lifespan and must die. So why should it be any different for his brothers? If the three brothers embody three aspects of the supreme god and there is a mother, there should logically also be a father. A quick search on the internet shows various indications that this is the case. The name of the father is Kal, Kaal, also Brahm-Kaal or Maha-Kal, who is described as the actual negative force and the highest, fallen son of God. (See also the "Anurag Sagar".) At this point there is therefore a similarity to the biblical story of the fallen angel Satan. Kal, however, makes virtually no appearance. He is said to be quite terrifying and hides himself so as not to get entangled in his karmic system. (Kal is also sometimes identified as Satan, but I suspect that Satan is Shiva.)

The Negative Force rules not only the physical world, but also the next two higher subtle worlds, which are also called the astral and causal planes. The three gods have their home in the causal plane, which is many times more beautiful, more luminous, more glorious, wider and more permanent than our material world. Their mother, however, resides one level above, where the Negative Force is still present but no longer in control. She can, of course, also stay in the more material planes through the corresponding bodies that are available to her there. Her sons, however, have no way of gaining access to her level. You will find this information, for example, in Anurag Sagar or in the surroundings of Sant Mat.

The gods of negative power want above all to rule, for example over us humans. It is unbearable for them if we withdraw from their control. They know that we will then become bigger and stronger than them and they will have to bend to our will. They want to prevent this at all costs - naturally. The Negative Force has a sphere of influence that reaches very far, to the outermost limits of the transient worlds. It offers spiritual seekers their own system with which a soul can make it there. Even if this happiness is only reserved for very few souls. As a rule, no one is allowed out of the domain.

People who worship Vishnu regard his heavenly abode Vaikuntha Loka as the highest goal. Only a liberated soul will be allowed to stay there after death and enjoy the unsurpassable paradisiacal pleasures of that world. In fact, this place is in the causal plane, so like Vishnu himself, it is transient and not beyond the boundaries of the realm where karmic laws apply. There can therefore be no question of redemption from the cycle of rebirths. As soon as the karmic merit that entitles the soul to stay in this place has been used up, or at the latest at the time of the small dissolution, the soul will fall again. Compared to the kingdom of the true Lord, Vaikuntha is not even like a tiny, cute doll's house in some nursery on planet earth. Yet Hindus who focus their lives on salvation and journey to this place are already among the advanced spiritual seekers of their kind. In fact, the truth is withheld from them and a beautiful deception is served up. This is what happens to all those who trust the gods, who entrust themselves to them. They remain prisoners and slaves of the negative power. Their heavenly prison offers a high level of comfort, but it is and remains a prison.

Access to the imperishable kingdom of God, which is our true home, the heaven of immortality, where the eternal song of the harps resounds, is denied to us in any case. The Negative Force knows how to prevent a soul from making it there. The only exceptions are the highest masters, the bearers of God's power on earth and perhaps very few individual cases among the disciples. I assume that so far all masters have failed to lead a significant number of disciples to this goal. I believe that before the imminent great change, the 144,000 souls from the 12 tribes of Israel alone, as described in Revelation, will make it there by the grace of the Messiah, who will return and make the impossible possible. This will happen above all through the holy, "resounding" word of God, the audible, tangible sound and the invocation of his name (on the forehead). I desire with all my heart to serve God in this great mission and to be able to assist the mature souls in this birth. This is the reason why I am going public with such information. The future will show whether it will really happen soon, whether I am right or not.

For me it is clear: the gods, as they appear in Hinduism and other religions and myths, are among God's adversaries. They are our true enemies, the enemies of man. As far as the final, absolute liberation of human souls is concerned, they are in no way prepared to make concessions. They would rather destroy the whole of creation than allow us to emancipate ourselves from them and allow them to fall from their throne. In an emergency, we can expect them to be prepared to resort to every conceivable cruelty to defend their rule. In order to get past them, we must leave the world behind us inwardly, rise above ourselves and surrender our lives solely to the highest God of love, purity and truthfulness.

In fact, absolutely all areas, movements, religions, groups, beliefs, etc. are affected by the influence of the negative force - without exception. Absolutely nothing and nobody has really been able to escape it. My comments on the "Spiritual Schools", Hinduism and the following texts are intended to help sharpen people's awareness of this. For what is true and what God's adversary has put into our media in the form of false, misleading and divisive content/information that alienates us from God. If you see a reference to Hinduism anywhere, you can assume that the Negative Force is behind it or at least heavily involved.
